

Chapter 1896 Arrange An Abortion For Janet Secretly

Frank was surprised by Brandon's abrupt decision. He inhaled deeply and advised, "Brandon, calm down first. If you go through with terminating the pregnancy without her consent, Janet will never forgive you."

Brandon sat silently, his expression troubled.

Seeing him distressed, Frank continued patiently, "I understand you're upset, and I know why you want to do this. However, even if you consider not having the child, you must discuss it with Janet first. It's her body, and she has the right to decide."

Brandon glared at Frank and warned, "Just keep quiet and don't say anything to her. I'll handle the rest."

Stunned, Frank hesitated before responding, "Are you suggesting you want to arrange an abortion for Janet secretly?"

Brandon exhaled sharply and asserted, "Since we're unsure if the pregnancy should continue, it's better to address it quickly to lessen the impact on her physical and mental health."

Frank shook his head. "I can't assist with that, neither as a doctor nor as her friend. It's too harsh."

Firmly, Brandon suggested, "Then tell her the embryo wasn't viable and that it was a natural miscarriage."

Frank looked away, resolute. "No. I can't do that."

Decisions about the pregnancy should solely rest with Janet, the mother. Neither you nor I have the right to decide the fate of her child."

Brandon stood up, determined, and said, "Then I'll speak to Janet's attending doctor. Until the procedure is done, keep away from her."

With that, he left the room.

Listening to Brandon's fading footsteps, Frank stared at Janet's contact on his phone and sighed deeply. After a long pause, he put the phone away.

He couldn't terminate the pregnancy without her knowing, nor could he inform her of Brandon's plan without betraying his friend.

In the ward, Janet lay bored in her bed, browsing entertainment news to pass the time. Nearly an hour later, Brandon returned.

"Why did you take so long?" Janet gazed intently at Brandon's solemn face, worried he might show any sign of not wanting the baby.

Brandon put on a calm facade and reassured her, "I talked to the doctor about the next steps in treatment. There's a bunch of options, so it took some time."

He then sat beside her, showing concern. "How are you feeling? Is there anything bothering you? Do you want something to eat, or perhaps some company?"

Janet smiled and shook her head. "I'm fine. I feel so much better. I'd return to work if the doctor hadn't insisted I stay."

Brandon stood and carefully adjusted her quilt.
"Forget about work for now. The most important thing is the baby. You need to take care of yourself."

As Brandon carefully explained what she should focus on during her hospital stay to ensure the baby's health, Janet felt somewhat reassured.

Considering how much Brandon cared about the baby, it only made sense that he'd want to keep it.

But she was still worried. Just to be sure, she reached out to Johanna when Brandon wasn't around in the ward.
