

Chapter 1913 Battle Of Public Opinion

Inside the White family's villa, Janet sat comfortably, eating fresh fruit, while casually browsing through the latest news trends. Observing her daughter's composed demeanor, Johanna couldn't shake off a nagging sense of concern, feeling her own anxiety level rise.

Pregnant women were often described as emotionally volatile, but Janet's outward serenity belied any deeper turmoil she might be experiencing.

Sensing Johanna's distress, Janet set aside her tablet and reached out to soothe her mother's furrowed brow. "Mom, please don't worry. Every minute you spend frowning is like wasting a month's worth of skincare treatments. Everything is going to be okay."

Johanna instinctively pressed her fingers against her forehead to smooth out the creases. "Stay calm, stay level-headed," she repeated to herself in an effort to regain her composure.

Seated nearby, Beal took a sip of his coffee and addressed Johanna in a gentle, reassuring tone. "There's no need to fret. Have faith in Larson Group's professional PR team. They handle such matters with ease. In the past, Brandon meticulously managed everything related to Janet online, and there was never a misstep. As parents, we should

They handle such matters with ease. In the past, Brandon meticulously managed everything related to Janet online, and there was never a misstep. As parents, we should trust them and their decisions."

Beal's praise of Brandon elicited a smile from Janet, who chimed in with agreement. "Yes, Dad is right. Brandon has a knack for this, and I have full confidence in him."

Observing the unity between father and daughter, Johanna couldn't help but sigh. "Alright, I understand. It seems the two of you are on the same page. I'm not questioning Brandon's abilities. It's just...it feels like we've hardly known peace in these past few years. Brandon's always there for you, yet troubles still arise."

Beal's response carried a hint of concern as he addressed Johanna's worries. "It's not as straightforward as it seems. These incidents aren't solely due to Brandon's actions or inactions. Please, put your mind at ease. Good things take time, and our family's future will be filled with happiness."

"Mom, don't worry." Janet leaned affectionately against Johanna's shoulder. "I won't let anything affect me, especially not for the sake of the baby."

Johanna smiled warmly, patting Janet's hand

Meanwhile, Brandon's PR team swiftly demonstrated their professionalism and efficiency by taking decisive action. They exposed several professional shills and effectively suppressed the trending online controversies. Additionally, they shed light on the truth behind Janet's design leak and the events at the restaurant.

Despite some continued attacks, the majority of rational netizens sided with Janet as the facts came to light.

Amidst the turmoil, celebrities and influencers from the entertainment industry stepped forward to expose Apachicorp Entertainment's unjust tactics, revealing their own experiences of victimization. Previously, they had felt powerless against Apachicorp Entertainment's influence, but now, with someone taking a stand against them, it felt like a form of justice for the public's benefit.

While some online critics persisted in their attacks on Janet, the majority vehemently disagreed with their viewpoint.

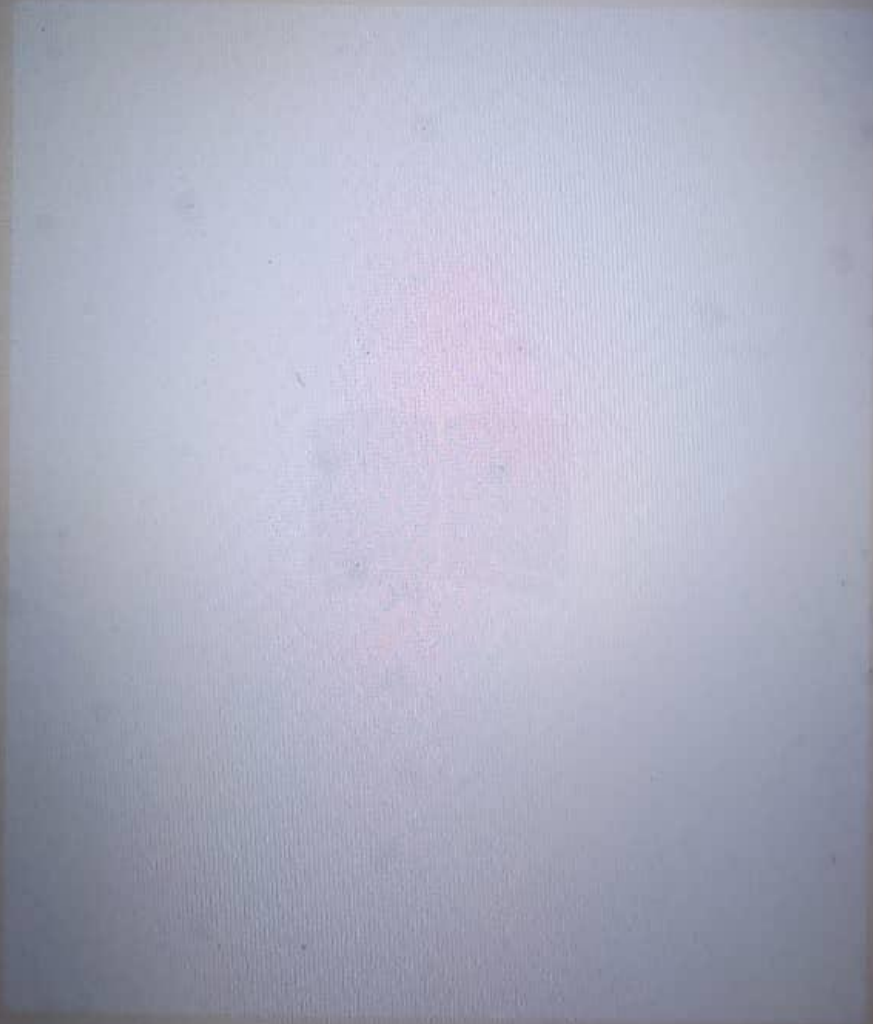

Surprisingly, Janet found herself gaining an unexpected surge of support while staying at home. Influencers and minor celebrities rallied behind her, showing their solidarity by placing orders through her studio's backend.

The following day, Lexi excitedly called Janet with exhilarating news: after nearly half a year of uncertainty, the studio was finally bustling with orders again.

Just as Lexi eagerly inquired about returning to the
