

Ch 19 - You're My Lucky Girl

They continued the rest of her training session and she proved to be really determined, which surprised the two guys. As tired as she was, she wanted to prove to herself and the guys that she could really do it. By the time she was done, she was tired, but she was already halfway with her training.

Cain couldn't believe it.

All they had to do was go over the last few moves and then practice them until she perfected them. Not even his werewolf subjects had grasped anything that fast. What he noticed though, was that a little bit of her enhanced abilities had seeped through, and he wasn't quite sure what that meant as yet.

"Cally! That was amazing!" Isaiah was the first to comment.

She looked up, still catching her breath. "What was?"

"How quickly you grasped everything and just how you moved. It normally takes the average werewolf two weeks to do what you just did," Isaiah explained.

Ch 19 - You're My Lucky Girl

"Really?" Calypso asked, not bothering to hide her shock.

"Yeah! It took some of the pack's warriors that long too, so that says a lot about you," Isaiah added.

She frowned to herself. "Wow! I guess I really was determined."

"That you most definitely were, but it was a good thing. How do you feel now?" Cain asked her.

"Honestly, I feel stronger, but also sore and tired – nothing a blasting hot shower won't fix though," she noted.

"Well, you ARE stronger if that's a consolation," Cain complimented.

"It's awesome knowing that, and I owe it to you guys," she smiled.

Cain returned the smile. "Nah! As much as we'd love to take the credit for this, Henson is the one the credit should go to, as well as your own determination."

She raised an eyebrow. "You reckon?"

Ch 19 - You're My Lucky Girl

"For once I agree with him on this! Henson did a pretty good job with you Cally. If we didn't already know that the two of you aren't mates, we would've definitely seen you two together. He cares about you a lot, as much as you care about him," Isaiah pointed out. Calypso was stunned for what felt like the millionth time that day.

"Well, what do you know," she giggled.

"We like him for you for now Cals, but don't tell him we said that. We're still playing the intimidating brothers card," Cain winked.

"Oh, but he's not afraid of you, or even the slightest bit intimidated by you," she commented.

"What? What makes you so sure?" Cain questioned.

A slow smile made its way onto her face. "Because he wouldn't have had the guts to kiss me in front of you if he did."

She left them baffled, running all the way to her room. She jumped into the shower, blasting the hot water onto her aching muscles. It was a magnificent feeling as her body unlocked in all the right places. The temperature of the water didn't even bother her. She instead let her mind wander back to the month she'd had since staying here.

Since that night, she hadn't had any run-ins with Charice since Charice left that night with Tyson. She was getting along just fine with the rest of the pack members, having even made friends with most of the elders.

This pack definitely wasn't like her old one, as much as she missed her best friends. Here she felt like she was home, though she had a nagging feeling that everyone knew something she didn't, and that they were hiding this thing from her.

She stepped out of the bathroom to find Cassidy laying on her bed, which didn't surprise her all that much. She and Cassidy had become even closer than sisters within the last month. Their bond was just that special. Whenever one of them was caught out, you'd be guaranteed that the other was close by as well. It was like they were twins, but even closer. She also felt most confident around Cassidy.

"Hello lover!" Calypso shouted once she was dressed, joining Cassidy on the bed.

"Hey baby! Are you excited for your date tonight?" Cassidy laughed, smiling at her.

Ch 19 - You're My Lucky Girl

"Ask me the same question in about four hours' time," Calypso yawned before falling asleep to the sound of Cassidy giggling.

While Cassidy didn't expect to, she too ended up falling asleep with Calypso. Had it not been for the girls coming to check if Calypso was getting ready for her date, she and Cassidy would've fallen asleep until the next morning. They quickly got Calypso up and instructed her to get showered while they got everything ready for her. Luckily, they'd already gone dress shopping under Channing's instructions.

"I do not feel like being dolled up," Calypso admitted.

"Which is why the make-up will be light, we promise," they said.

They kept to their word and did her make-up, keeping it minimal before getting her dressed. She was dressed in a long gray dress with diamante crystals. They curled her hair up in a sophisticated do before putting on her jewellery for her. They were clever enough to match her jewellery with her pendant since the thing doesn't come off.

By the time they were done, Calypso couldn't believe it was her.

Ch 19 - You're My Lucky Girl

"I assume this date isn't a simple one then," she laughed nervously.

"No it isn't! You have his gift right?" Isyss asked her. She nodded as she held up the package.

"Good! Now, he'll be here any second. You look absolutely breathtaking," Ivy smiled.

"Thank you," she blushed.

If she was blushing now, then how would she be with Channing?

"I believe his car is here, so let's get you down there before those boys ruin things for you," Cassidy suggested.

The girls walked out first so that Calypso could do her dramatic entrance. She could hear the boys downstairs. She smiled to herself as she listened to her four 'brothers' grill her boyfriend. What made her smile were his responses though. He really wasn't all that intimidated by them. She took a deep breath before going down the stairs.

"Now we expect her home by twelve!" Beck demanded.

Ch 19 - You're My Lucky Girl

"For the millionth time, I-" Channing started off but was cut off by the beauty before him.

He couldn't believe his eyes. While he loved being with Calypso, at that moment, he couldn't have cursed her more for not being his mate. He wanted nothing more, and her looking that beautiful wasn't doing him a favour. He was completely speechless, even after she'd reached the bottom of the stairs.

"He looks so hypnotized," Isla teased, effectively bringing Channing out of his trance. Calypso was just as affected seeing him in his suit.

"Screw twelve! We want her back here at ten!" Cain said sternly.

"That only gives us two hours of our date. That's stupid Cain!" Calypso sassed.

"But sis, you're looking all beautiful and quite frankly, we wouldn't trust ANYONE with you right now!" Cain groaned.

"Cain Dante Henriques!" Calypso growled at him.

That's another big change that occurred within the last month. While everyone thought that Cain and Calypso had a sibling bond, Cain wanted to make it official, but Calypso didn't want to change her last name because it was the only thing connecting her to her past.

Having already dealt with and accepted his past, Cain had no problem being the one to change his last name. He loved his family, but Calypso was a fresh start for him. He was also now her legal guardian since she was seventeen and he was twenty one.

"Alright fine! You don't have a curfew, but I swear Henson, I will rip you a new one if she comes back in any state but happy! Got it?" Cain threatened. Channing couldn't help but be intimidated that time.

This was definitely the big brother coming out.

Channing nervously nodded. "Got it!"

"Ok! Get going now kids," Cassidy shooed them out the door.

"Calm down Cass," Calypso tittered.

"Have a good time ok Cally-Cals?" Cassidy smiled.

Calypso hugged her. "I will."

Ch 19 - You're My Lucky Girl

Soon enough, she and Channing were on their way to wherever it is they were headed. She wasn't even the least bit curious. She was just content with watching him drive while telling her about his day after she left. She was so enthralled in everything that she didn't even realize that they'd made it.

"Baby girl, we're here," he chuckled as she stared at him.

She snapped out of her daze. "What? Already?"

"Did you even hear ANYTHING I said to you?" he asked.

She blushed. "I actually did! You were the only thing I was paying attention to."

"Well we're here, so let's go," he stated as he got out of the car. He went around to open her door and help her out of the car.

"Where are we exactly?" she asked, realizing she didn't recognize her surroundings.

"You'll see," he whispered in her ear.

He took her hand and led her into the building. When her eyes landed on everything around her, she couldn't believe it. She couldn't believe that someone could be so thoughtful for someone that wasn't their mate. For the first time since they started dating, she wished nothing more than to have him be her mate, but she knew it wasn't meant to be.

Ch 19 - You're My Lucky Girl

It didn't stop her from appreciating anything though.

"Your mate is going to be the luckiest girl in the world," she said lowly with glistening eyes.

"That may be, but for now, you're my lucky girl. Happy one month anniversary baby girl," he grinned before kissing her.

Comments

Support